REVISED MARCH 2020

- There will be no changes in the grading criteria due to the COVID-19 pandemic and the canceled face-to-face teaching will not be substituted by tools like Zoom.
- Instead, the communication tools on D2L will be used as a discussion forum and as a mailing-list. Students will be asked to write very short reflection-papers (0,5 to 1 page maximum) on our forthcoming readings and to send them to the entire class. This way, students will share their ideas, give mutual feedback, and so will the instructor. Additionally, the instructor will moderate an open discussion on D2L, providing guidance and additional materials to the ones already posted on D2L. As said, this does not change the grading criteria. The reflection-papers will not be graded. But the instructor will take anything students write on and send over D2L as an alternative to class participation.
- The final papers will be written at home as planned and as scheduled, with the instructor's personal supervision via email.

DESCRIPTION

This seminar is based on the demographic trend of Jews starting a new life in Germany or Austria. Since the 1990s, an increasing number of Jewish immigrants from Eastern Europe, Russia, the Ukraine, and Israel have begun to write in German, bringing fresh experiences, new critical perspectives, more global settings, and internationally relevant stories to the formerly much more homogenous literary scene of the Berlin Republic. This course aims at analyzing the emotional, political, and sexual ambivalences involved in this transcultural writing, especially regarding the problem of increasing current antisemitism in Germany and the question of remembering the Shoah from the point of view of the second or third Jewish generation after the Holocaust. Therefore, this seminar not only will critically look at historical, political and social backgrounds of this highly acclaimed literary trend, but also will discuss it against the background of the dangerously growing anti-Israeli and antisemitic resentments in Austria and Germany.

Faculty of Arts

School of Languages, Linguistics, Literatures and Cultures

Students will read and interpret some of the most successful novels in recent years, describing Jewish perspectives on contemporary German speaking countries – such as Olga Grjasnowa's Der Russe ist einer, der Birken liebt, 2012, translated in 2014 as All Russians Love Birch Trees, disturbing short stories and novels by Maxim Biller (Liebe heute, translated as Love Today), Doron Rabinovici (Suche nach M, translated as The Search for M), and Katja Petrowskaja's recently translated bestselling novel on her family history during and after the Shoah in today's Ukraine, Vielleicht Esther, 2014 (Maybe Esther, 2018).

OBJECTIVES

By taking and completing this course with active engagement and the readiness to thoroughly read a couple of stories and novels over the semester, including exemplary research articles on these texts, students will get a decent survey of German-Jewish writing from the 1990s to most recent publications. They will learn how to interpret fictional and autobiographical texts by both male and female German-Jewish writers in contemporary literature, comparing their stance on the question of how to address the traumatic history of surviving the Holocaust from the perspective of younger generations.

OUTCOMES

Students will get a deeper understanding of what it actually means to live in contemporary Germany and Austria as a Jew, countries that still have not – and probably never should – end their so called Vergangenheitsbewältigung, that is their coming to terms with its crime of killing six million Jews during World War II. Central questions to be understood are the aesthetic challenges of writing adequately about remembering the Shoah, or issues just as post-memory, which means the transmission of traumatic experiences from the first generation of Jewish Holocaust survivors to later generations, as described by researcher Marianne Hirsch. Moreover, students will reflect on migration and immigration in contemporary Germany and Austria, and the difficulty of experiencing love and sexuality in identity positions of in-betweenness or hybridity.

ACADEMIC MISCONDUCT

1. Plagiarism is a serious offence, the penalty for which is an F on the assignment and possibly also an F in the course, academic probation, or requirement to withdraw. Plagiarism exists when:

Faculty of Arts

- a) the work submitted or presented was done, in whole or in part, by an individual other than the one submitting or presenting the work (this includes having another impersonate the student or otherwise substituting the work of another for one's own in an examination or test);
- b) parts of the work are taken from another source without reference to the original author;
- c) the whole work (e.g., an essay) is copied from another source, and/or
- d) a student submits or presents work in one course which has also been submitted in another course (although it may be completely original with that student) without the knowledge of or prior agreement of the instructor involved.

While it is recognized that scholarly work often involves reference to the ideas, data and conclusions of other scholars, intellectual honesty requires that such references be explicitly and clearly noted."

Plagiarism occurs not only when direct quotations are taken from a source without specific acknowledgement but also when original ideas or data from the source are not acknowledged. A bibliography is insufficient to establish which portions of the student's work are taken from external sources; footnotes or other recognized forms of citation must be used for this purpose.

2. Cheating at tests or examinations includes but is not limited to dishonest or attempted dishonest conduct such as speaking to other candidates or communicating with them under any circumstances whatsoever; bringing into the examination room any textbook, notebook, memorandum, other written material or mechanical or electronic device not authorized by the examiner; writing an examination or part of it, or consulting any person or materials outside the confines of the examination room without permission to do so, or leaving answer papers exposed to view, or persistent attempts to read other students' examination papers.

3. Other academic misconduct includes, but is not limited to, tampering or attempts to tamper with examination scripts, class work, grades and/or class records; failure to abide by directions by an instructor regarding the individuality of work handed in; the acquisition, attempted acquisition, possession, and/or distribution of examination materials or information not authorized by the instructor; the impersonation of another student in an examination or other class assignment; the falsification or fabrication of clinical or laboratory reports; the non-authorized tape recording of lectures.

4. Any student who voluntarily and consciously aids another student in the commission of one of these offences is also guilty of academic misconduct.
